

Solar storm

98 3 8

Chapter 1 by Lydia Clayton

I wake up knowing that everything has changed, that nothing is as it was and that nothing will be the same. I'm not in my room, I'm in the middle of a shattered room with unpainted walls and floors without fixing. At the corner I see a guy who looks at me and I need to get out of there, I'm running out of air.

"Wait! Don't go outside!" Those words come from my back but I'm scared so I try to get out the room and then an explosion puts me to the ground. I start to scream, and I can feel my body burning.

"Oh god, the sun hit her. Come on! We have to take her to a safe place"

"I told you not to go outside. Don't you get we are in the middle of a solar storm? The explosions can kill you."

In the middle of a solar storm? How is that possible? I can't keep thinking and my eyes start closing until I can only see darkness.

Chapter 2 by swimmerdragon

I awoken to the sound of beeps. What happened? Then I remember being in a large, run-down room, running outside, the burning sun, the explosion, the darkness. I wake up in a hospital bed. Huh. That was a weird dream. At least I'm back in my room now. Actually, my alarm clock is ringing, trying to make sure I don't miss my class.

Smiling, I rub my eyes, but then the smile fades. I am in the same room. Am I still in the dream? A beeping machine sits next to me.

"Well, you should be lucky that you only took one single step out the door, huh?" A voice comes from beside me.

Chapter 3 by Contemtuos Commander Grigsby

"What?" I said groggily.

"The solar storm, if you had traveled farther out into the storm- well... you would've died." The doctor snorts.

"Why?"

"Why what?" The doctor asks me.

"Why, how- the storm. It wasn't supposed to happen for years. That's what they said!" I croak.

"To be honest with you, I don't know why."
